Historic Points of Interest: Malone includes many of the earliest developed subdivisions outside the original city plat. The oldest houses on their original foundations are located west of 22d St, displaying a variety of architecturally unique styles with hipped and gable roofs and woodwork, glass, and cedar siding characteristic of the turn of the century. Farrell subdivision homes at 125, 135 and 145 N. 22 St, are the best examples of the recessed porch style found in Lincoln. Other historically interesting properties include: 2246 O St., a Spanish Colonial Revival built in 1928; 2310 Q St., a Victorian Revival featuring a Round Eastlake porch and fish scale gables; 2200 R St, a Period Revival; and Whittier School, a Neo-Classic Revival. Another neighborhood treasure is the railroad depot at 1944 O Street, which now serves as a Union Bank branch. Malone is home to Lincoln's 10th historic landmark district: the Hawley Historic District, created in 1998. Some of the homes in this area date back to the 1880's with the majority built from 1890 to 1910. Two Hawley District houses are listed on the National Register: the Eddy-Taylor House at 435 N. 25th St and the Royer-Williams House at 407 N. 26th St. The Cultra duplex, located at 545 N 25th, has a local landmark designation.
